MYANMAR'S INTER-CENSUS SURVEY 2019 SHOWS PROGRESS IN SEVERAL DEVELOPMENT INDICATORS

Upendranadh Choragudi

Myanmar Government's department of population has released during the last week Inter-census Survey 2019 preliminary results that reflects the progress that the country has made in terms of major demographic, socio-economic and development indicators. Covering 132 indicators, Inter-census survey (ICS) identifies progress made between 2014 and 2019. With over 0.5 million sample across the country, this survey is a prelude to the forthcoming decadal population census of the country. It is also seen as a baseline for Myanmar Sustainable Development (MSDP) indicators which reflect the human development and socio-economic changes that the country is undergoing over the past few years. In a way it also reflects the outcomes of the policies pursued by the government over the past few years, though some of them reflect long term trend.

Demographics

While the results reflect the situation pertaining to the conventional households which were surveyed, broad patterns reflect the situation of change that the country has witnessed over the past four years. There are some interesting trends that one can observe from these findings. There is an increase in life expectancy of population from 64.3 years in 2014 to 69.4 in 2019 which would mean a significant improvement in overall well being of the population. This is one sensitive indicator that reflects the health of the society.

At the same time there are rather remarkable achievements in terms of infant mortality (61.8 to 30.9) and under five mortality (71.8 to 37.7) in a span of five years. These dramatic declines of significant order begs more deeper analysis and it would be interesting to study the underlying factors that contributed to this change and also the hot spots that need attention. It would be an interesting area of engagement for child health experts and demographers to explore and design schemes to further reduce these scores.

Some of the demographic changes also reflect the changing economic and social developments. For example, sex ratio of having 88 males for every 100 females appears to be a reflection of out migration of male members in search of work to cities and outside the country. Implications of such a situation on the women, on the rural economy (labour shortage, remittance incomes), on cities that attract workers (particularly Yangon) and also on economy as a whole requires deeper analysis.

Disability

At the same time there are also indicators that reflect more refined and accurate data. This is pertaining to disability. There have been studies in the past on the low and under estimation of levels of disability in Myanmar's 2014 census operations. This has been due to non-enumeration of all forms of disability that is prevalent across the population. The 2019 ICS appears to have rectified this anomaly. The disability prevalence rate is estimated to be about 12 per cent, with all forms of disability accounted for. Such disaggregated data in this area is important to design programs of interventions.

Social indicators

ICS 2019 also provides evidences on the situation with respect to several social and development indicators. With respect to social pensions, Myanmar has very modest achievements in supporting the marginal groups with pensions. While formal sector worker's pension, military and associated family pensions form major part of the pension coverage, very small proportion of population are receiving any social security assistance, disabled and aged persons assistance schemes. With over ninety per cent of work force in the informal sector, the need for universal social pensions (for those out of work and aged) is acknowledged to absorb the family shocks and vulnerabilities. The recent COVID-19 pandemic has exposed such vulnerabilities and the government has to resort to emergency cash assistance to vulnerable families and cash for work programs for the unemployed workers. While Myanmar has an elaborately developed social protection policy document and plan, there seem to be little progress over the past four years in the coverage of various schemes as the data reflects. Universal social protection is proven to be a critical ingredient for inclusive growth and development.

Some of the demographic changes also reflect the changing economic and social developments.
